Green iguanas are some of the largest lizards found in the United States, even though they're not native.

Baby green iguanas may even eat adult green iguana poo to help develop gut flora that can help break down their leafy diet!

Other larger reptiles and mammals may also go after green iguana hatchlings.

As an Appendix II species of CITES, any international trade of green iguanas is closely monitored to ensure the trade will not impede natural populations.

Grand Cayman's Department of Environment will be paying individuals to cull invasive green iguana populations in the area.
